

GREETINGS!

My passion for weather came from my Grandmother, who first taught me how to look at the signs. From this I developed a love of weather and a love for Nature and what it says to us.

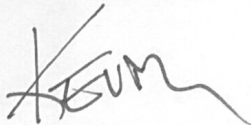

Scripture tells us these signs are present and I have no reason to doubt that.

Each year, I compile a winter forecast based on the signs I see in Nature. Many of you also have at least a passing interest in what Nature can tell us about future weather. Things like persimmon seeds, acorns, squirrels' tails, corn husks and many more. This year's forecast is also based on these natural signs.

With all of this in mind, here's my winter forecast. I compiled this in late October, early November. Looking now at short-term computer forecasts, I have an uncomfortable feeling that, at least for the beginning of my forecast, the signs have failed me. Or maybe I didn't pay enough attention to those black woolly worms! However, I'm sticking with my forecast and will just have to wait to see how it pans out. Also, while I may be off the mark with temperatures to begin with, I remain rather optimistic about the precipitation and when it may fall.

So, here you are: Kevin's Winter Forecast for 2018-2019.

My best to you all~

A handwritten signature in black ink that reads "KEVIN". The letters are stylized and connected, with a long, sweeping underline that extends to the right.